

2026 in Focus

Shaping Momentum into Results in Financial Services

2025 created momentum	2026 will determine how effectively it is shaped into results	Across capital markets, financial services, and insurance, organizations are entering a more demanding phase of enterprise maturity. The focus is shifting from experimentation to execution, with ambition judged by consistency rather than novelty. The defining question for the year ahead is not what is possible, but what is sustainable at scale.

What Is Beginning to Take Shape in 2026 and Why It Matters

CAPITAL MARKETS

From Performance Optimization to Structural Resilience

With speed now a baseline expectation, differentiation has shifted toward resilient, modular architectures. Institutions are adopting designs that absorb volatility and regulatory change without destabilizing core operations. 2026 will be the proving ground that reveals the success or failure of these structural pivots.

FINANCIAL SERVICES

From Isolated AI Use Cases to Orchestrated Intelligence

Financial institutions are transitioning from isolated AI deployments to enterprise-wide orchestration. In 2026, success will depend less on expanding capability and more on establishing coherence, governance, and trust across intelligence-driven decisions.

INSURANCE

From Periodic Assessment to Continuous Risk Intelligence

As risk volatility outpaces traditional models, insurers are turning to continuous risk intelligence. By integrating real-time data, they aim to intervene earlier and resolve issues faster. In 2026, the real test will be whether these dynamic models can deliver foresight and align risk more closely with value.

Looking Ahead

The year ahead places greater scrutiny on how institutions balance ambition with discipline, and innovation with accountability.

The foundations laid in 2025 are now being exercised through execution, revealing where architectures, operating models, and governance structures are ready, and where they are still evolving.

We look forward to exploring these themes with you throughout the year, through insight, analysis, and real-world transformation stories.
